

It is my opinion as a resident of Indiana that the FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections. Indiana's Telephone Privacy law has improved your time at home by not having to answer repeated unwanted calls from companies trying to sell me something I don't want or need. Most telemarketers do not listen when you tell them no and continue to employ high pressure tactics.

Indiana's law has been very effective in reducing unwanted calls. We used to receive 40-50 unwanted sales calls per week and now receive them very rarely.

Indiana's law should not be tampered with. I feel that allowing telemarketers to call my house without my permission is an invasion of my privacy and interferes with my pursuit of happiness and peace.
